A good example of why manual is better than automatic: In the first dirt license test, you're supposed to climb a steep hill before going into the turn. On automatic, while you're going up the hill, it'll shift to 2nd gear in the hill. If you use manual instead of automatic, you can stay in first gear and keep your power going up the hill.

I use automatic for now with my controller, I should probably switch to manual. Don't know how much difference it'll make, but I feel like I would rather focus on driving clean first then learning to handle my shifters. Maybe when I switch to a wheel I'll switch to manual, those paddles shifters will be nice.

While on manual i was loosing traction of my car while exiting the corner. But on manual with the same approach and speed car had more traction. And also when i'm on Manual the gears shift and downshift automatically when i reach certain RPM. And i can still shift and downshift while on automatic. For me it's easier using Auto on Dualshock 4.

I should imagine manual is far easier, and fun, to drift with as you can easily manage your gears, speed and angle to a more precise way. If you can, try a track out first in automatic, to see what gears it's going into, then try the same gears in a manual box. Worth a shot.
